PREFATORY NOTE.

EDUCATION DEPARTMENT.

1849—1861.

THIS volume contains the selected papers of the Education Department from its establishment down to 1861. The Department was first started in 1854 and was originally under the orders of the Judicial Commissioner. In 1856 it was transferred to the Financial Commissioner. The first Director of Public Instruction was appointed in the person of Mr. W. D. Arnold—a son of Dr. Arnold of Rughby—who had previously been first an officer in the Army and then an Assistant Commissioner. As the Department expanded Inspectors were appointed—Messrs. Paske and Browne being the first two—with the necessary assistant staff. From the records it appears that the Department was very little affected by the Mutiny of 1857. Indeed, the actual number of students in the schools went up during the worst months of the out-break, i.e., from May to July. Apart from this the Mutiny is hardly mentioned. There is a circular from the Director of Public Instruction ordering schools to be kept open and salaries to be paid regularly and later a proposal to reduce establishment to save money. Beyond this an application for a Police Guard for the office is practically all there is in reference to the Mutiny.

From the first the Punjab authorities showed great enthusiasm in the cause of education, so great, indeed, as to cause misgivings on the part of the Government of India who complained that, at the rate the Punjab Government were going, they would kill private competition altogether and further, that they were spending more in proportion on education than any other province.

Mr. Arnold went on leave in 1859 and died at Algeciras on the way home. After various officiatings and the offer of the appointment to Mr. Maclagan—father of Sir Edward Maclagan—who declined it, Captain A. Fuller, Inspector of Schools at Meerut, was appointed Director of Public Instruction on January 1860.
